Woodward Library Helps Polifonía Celebrate 10 Years

In honor of the 10th anniversary of Polifonía Scholarly Journal, the Woodward Library Display Committee created an exhibit to highlight their work over the last decade. Polifonía is Austin Peay State University's bilingual, peer-reviewed journal of literary criticism and culture of Hispanic Studies. First launched in 2011, Polifonía offers an opportunity for scholars to publish essays in Spanish or English about Hispanic literature and film in underrepresented areas of literary criticism and academia. Editors Dr. Osvaldo Di Paolo Harrison, APSU professor of Spanish, and Dr. Nadina Olmedo, associate professor of Spanish at the University of San Francisco, publish one volume each year with a dedicated theme.

Members of the Display Committee, Kristy Cunningham, Jarrod Jackson, Katie Pendleton, Corina Ravenscraft, and Tina Reid, researched each volume and located the appropriate film or work of literature to accompany the essays presented in the display cases. The committee also put together a feature wall with poster-size replications of the journal covers, including the newest 10th anniversary issue.

The display will run through January 2021. You can view electronic copies of the journal at https://www.apsu.edu/polifonia/. Free print copies of the journal are available in the Library while supplies last.

A Message From Society President Bonnington

As we enter this most unusual holiday season, I wish you health and good cheer. Our Society had to forgo our Fall Program due to the ongoing Covid-19 concerns. Our hope is that we will resume our wonderful series of presentations that have been a major focus of the Woodward Society sometime this spring. It would be more accurate to say our programs help focus on the wonderful resource that the APSU Woodward Library continues to be for the University and the wider community. My current readings? China Root (Hinton) and A Social History of Britain (Briggs). Stay safe and mindful of self and others.

Jonathan Bates is originally from Sewanee, Tennessee, up on the Cumberland Plateau. He earned a B.A. in English from the University of the South (Sewanee) and an M.A. in Comparative Literature from New York University. In 2005, he moved to Clarksville to teach English at APSU, and began working at the Woodward Library in 2006. Currently, he serves as coordinator for the Circulation and Information Commons Unit facilitating the circulation of library materials, maintaining circulation statistics and borrower records, and overseeing stacks maintenance operations and the Information Commons and the Library Instruction Room (LIR). He also works with the Access Services Coordinator to develop and implement policies and procedures for the unit.

In his spare time, Jonathan enjoys doing independent research on causes that interest him. He is addicted to reading and watching sports on television, and he's earned about ten tee shirts for good attendance at APSU's Boot Camp offered by University Recreation.

When asked to tell us something interesting about his life, Jonathan said, "I had my high school prom on the first floor of the Eiffel Tower (I graduated from the American School of Paris; my father was a Sewanee French professor, and we were there for one of his sabbaticals)."

Offering another interesting fact, he said, "I once lived for two years in a cabin in the woods in Sewanee without electricity, plumbing, or a telephone, doing my Thoreau imitation."

Congratulations to Board member and APSU political science professor Dr. Harold Young on the recent publication of his book The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the Caribbean Court Of Justice: Navigating Independence and Changing Political Environments.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council (JCPC) is an appeals court dating back to 1833 and formed to serve the British colonies and territories all over the world. As those colonies earned their independence, their leaders were faced with the decision to stay with the JCPC, or establish their own high court. In his book, Dr. Young examines how former British colonies in the Caribbean are shifting away from the JCPC and moving to the Caribbean Court of Justice.
